

WEEK OF JULY 8, 2024

Market Update

Tesla was the story of last week; it rose more than 27 percent after second-quarter delivery estimates were better than expected. Treasuries rallied slightly after minutes from the most recent Federal Reserve (Fed) meeting noted progress on inflation, indicating a rate cut could be in the not-too-distant future.

Quick Hits

- 1. Report releases: The Fed reiterated its data dependence in minutes from its most recent meeting.
- 2. Financial market data: Tesla fueled the rally in mega-cap names on better-than-expected second-quarter deliveries.
- 3. Looking ahead: The focus this week will be on inflation; consumer and producer price data for June is expected to be released.

Report Releases: July 1–5, 2024

ISM Manufacturing Index

June
(Monday)

The ISM Manufacturing index was weaker than expected, marking the third consecutive month of declines and the 19th decline in the past 20 months.

- Expected/prior month ISM Manufacturing index: 49.1/48.7
- Actual ISM Manufacturing index: 48.5

International Trade Balance

May
(Wednesday)

The international trade deficit increased 0.8 percent to $75.1 billion. Exports fell 0.7 percent, leading the expansion of the deficit.

Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) Meeting Minutes

June
(Wednesday)

In minutes from the FOMC's June meeting, the Fed acknowledged recent progress on inflation and stressed that it will remain data dependent as it tries to balance the evolving economic outlook and risks. Fed Chair Jerome Powell echoed this in recent commentary, suggesting that the central bank wants to see additional inflation data before adding to the confidence for a cut.

Employment Report

June
(Friday)

The employment report for June was slightly higher than expected, beating estimates of 200,000 jobs added by 6,000. Hourly wages fell 0.2 percent to 3.9 percent year-over-year, in line with expectations. The unemployment rate ticked up to 4.1 percent.

- Expected/prior month jobs added: 200,000/218,000
- Actual jobs added: 206,000

>> The Takeaway

- Manufacturing confidence remains subdued, and exports fell 0.7 percent in May.
- The June employment report was in line with expectations; the Fed remains data dependent as it moves toward a potential interest rate cut in early fall.

Treasuries also rallied on the potential for future rate cuts. The 10-year yield fell 7 basis points (bps), closing at 4.27 percent. The rally in 30-year Treasuries was a bit more muted; yields fell just 3 bps, closing at 4.47 percent.

>> The Takeaway

- Tesla fueled the rally in mega-cap names on better-than-expected second-quarter deliveries.
- Treasuries rallied on the back of Fed minutes and the belief that we may be closer to an interest rate cut in September.

Looking Ahead

- The week kicks off Monday with the release of consumer credit data for May. Consumer credit, which can be volatile month-over-month, is expected to increase from $6.4 billion in April to $8 billion.
- On Tuesday, we anticipate the release of the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB) Small Business Optimism Index for June. The index reached its lowest level since 2012 in March, falling to 88.5 before improving to 90.5 in May. It's expected to decline slightly to 90.3.
- Thursday will be the highlight of the week with the release of the CPI for June. It's expected to decline to 3.1 percent year-over-year, down from 3.3 percent in May. Core CPI, which excludes food and energy, is expected to remain flat at 3.4 percent year-over-year.
- Finally, on Friday, we expect the PPI for June. It's expected to rise 0.1 percent month-over-month after dipping 0.2 percent in May.
